Luana Martin-Russu is a postdoctoral researcher at the New School of Digital Studies (ENS) of the European University Viadrina Frankfurt (Oder) and Assistant to the Director at Ecologic Institute Berlin. Her current research focuses on the use of digital data analysis for measuring (de)Europeanization, with a particular focus on nature conservation reforms. Her main research interests include EU politics, European nature protection legislation, enlargement and conditionality, democracy and rule of law observance in Central, Eastern and South-Eastern Europe.

Luana gave input presentations and workshops in Germany, France, Italy, Switzerland and the UK. She is active in the non-governmental sector and leads a project on environmental and global citizenship education (www.ourbird.de). Luana has taught a wide range of classes in Europeanization, European Politics and IR.
