Academic Experience

European University Viadrina

Postdoctoral Researcher 2023–

I am a postdoctoral researcher at the European New School of Digital Studies working alongside Prof. Dr. Ulrike Klinger. My research focuses on how political parties and other political elites communicate in the digital era.

Freie Universität Berlin

Ph.D. Political Science summa cum laude 2019–2022

Dissertation: Partisan Polarization in Congressional Nominations: How Ideological & Factional Primaries Influence Candidate Positions

Committee: Christian Lammert (chair), Sean M. Theriault, Rachel M. Blum, Curd B. Knüpfer, Thorsten Faas, David Bosold

The thesis documents the changing dynamics of U.S. congressional primary competition between 2006 and 2020, namely, the proliferation of ideological and factional contests, then analyzes the impact of ideological and factional primaries on candidate positions in terms of the selective (voter) effect, between-election adaptative effect, and within-election adaptative effect using quantitative methods including causal inference and text-as-data. I show that voters do not systematically reward non-centrist positioning, even in primaries about ideological and factional differences, but that candidates often behave as if they do, adapting their positions both between and within election cycles.

MA North American Studies 1,0 2017–2019

The MA study focused primarily within the discipline of political science, with additional courses in cultural studies and interdisciplinary subjects. The thesis focused on the topic of polarization in the U.S. Congress and was awarded the highest grade of 1,0.

University of Exeter

BA Hons Politics 2:1 2005–2008

The BA program gave a broad introduction to the discipline of political science, the dissertation focused on media representations of the U.S. presidency and received a 1st.
